

Automatic window closers

V. Raghunathan

The cartoons in this series are meant to highlight the inherent humour in the manner in which most of our administrations function. One may construe them to be depictive to how administration tend to complicate basically simple tasks. Another may draw a parallel between the cartoon and some of our economic or political policy decisions where, for example, it is expected that a series of cause and effect relationships would finally lead to achieving certain objectives

Raghu

As rain (1) lashed the terrace of the house, the drain pipe (2) fills the bucket (3) with rain water so that the bucket goes down under the weight, opening in the roof through the ropes and pulleys the roof (4) and the door (5) of the dog house and the back door of the cat house (6) so that the dog inside the dog house gets wet and unhappy and naturally makes for the cat in the cat house still has its roof (7) intact leaving the cat (8) with no choice but to jump onto the suspended platform (9) which goes down under the weight of the cat closing the windows (10).